RE: Barrage of Republican TV Ads on Economy, Inflation and Taxes Overwhelm Democrats in 2022 Federal Midterm Election
DATE: October 28, 2022

After reviewing 351 TV ads aired over the last three months by Democratic and Republican congressional candidates in very competitive races and by their parties' congressional super PACs, Americans for Tax Fairness Action Fund (ATFAF) found that Democrats are being far outmatched on economic issues. The GOP's two congressional super PACs made relentless attacks centered on inflation, government spending, taxes and IRS enforcement—all key features of the Inflation Reduction Act (IRA) enacted with great effort last August—that went largely unanswered.

Democratic ads made up 57% of the total ads analyzed but just 30% of those on economic issues. And even when Democratic forces did address economic issues, it was not to counter GOP claims or promote the many popular features of the IRA. Instead, in Senate races Democrats and their congressional super PACs focused their advertising on jobs/supply chain/outsourcing and on prescription drugs, Medicare and Social Security. In House races, the economy message for the Democratic congressional super PAC was focused on drug prices, Medicare and Social Security. Many of the Democratic economy ads—particularly on Social Security and Medicare—did not appear until mid-October, in a scramble to correct for the earlier message miscalculation.

Below are more details on findings from the TV ads broadcast from August 1 to October 27, (also available in the table on the next page):

- Of 351 TV ads compiled and analyzed by ATFAF, 57% (200) were broadcast by Democratic candidates and their two congressional super PACs; 43% (151) were broadcast by Republican candidates and their two congressional super PACs. Nearly three-quarters of the ads (73%, or 257) were broadcast by super PACs, the remaining 27% (94) by candidates.
- 62% (216) of all the ads examined were primarily or somewhat about the “economy”, which ATFAF defined as mentioning inflation, government spending, taxes, IRS enforcement OR prescription drugs/prices—all components of the Inflation Reduction Act. (We generally excluded ads about covid relief spending, another major theme of GOP broadsides). This “economy” definition mainly applied to GOP ads. For Democratic ads, the “economy” criteria were broadened to include Social Security, Medicare and the Affordable Care Act (ACA) due to the shortage of Democratic ads under the narrower definition.

- Of those 216 “economy” TV ads, 70% (151) were run by two GOP congressional Super PACs (126) or Senate GOP candidates (25). The two Republican congressional super PACs, which are focused exclusively on attacking Democrats, are the Senate Leadership Fund (SLF), which ran 35 economy ads, and the House Leadership Fund (CLF), which ran 91 economy ads.
- The two Democratic congressional super PACs and Senate Democratic candidates ran 30% (65) of all economy ads: Super PACs broadcast 5 ads in Senate races and 34 in House contests. The Senate Majority PAC (SMP) and the House Majority PAC (HMP) exist to attack GOP candidates. Senate candidates ran 26 ads.
- The two GOP super PACs, which ran 126 (58%) of all economy ads, focused much more intensely on an “economy” message than did their Democratic counterparts. The ads were solely focused on making fraudulent claims about the IRA: pretending it will raise taxes on people making less than $75,000 a year; result in a lot of wasteful government spending; and unleash an army of 87,000 IRS agents on regular taxpayers.
- Senate candidates of both parties ran a quarter (24%) of the “economy” ads—51 of 216. These were divided almost equally: 25 for Republicans and 26 for Democrats. (Due to their large number, House candidates’ ads were not analyzed.)

* Democrats’ ad topics include Social Security, Medicare, prescription drugs and the Affordable Care Act (ACA).

Analyzed Republican ads exclude attacks on Democrats' positions on issues such as crime and the border unless the ad also included an "economy" message. Democratic TV ads compiled here included ones on abortion, crime and extremism to present a clearer picture of how economy ads stacked up against other ads used.

These figures are in keeping with media reports on political ad spending. The Washington Post reported on Oct. 7: "Republicans have spent more than $120 million on ads related to inflation this year, more than triple the figure for Democrats." Punchbowl reported on October 5th: "Since Aug. 1, Republican candidates and groups have spent more than $12 million on roughly 24,000 airings of ads warning of a massive influx of IRS agents. The spots are targeting vulnerable Senate Democratic incumbents ... as well as toss-up House races."

Democratic ads have mostly focused on threats to abortion rights presumably because polls show that message resonates with both the party's base and with swing voters.

But failing to also prioritize economic issues when inflation and other pocketbook issues are uppermost in voters' minds is a major mistake. A recent New York Times poll confirms that idea, finding:

- "The share of likely voters who said economic concerns were the most important issues facing America had leaped" since a similar survey over the summer to 44% of respondents.
- More than a third (38%) of women call the economy or inflation the nation's number one problem, compared to 9% that cite abortion rights.
- Four of ten independents similarly chose economic issues as their main concern, far above any other issue.

Democrats fought hard the past two years to secure legislation addressing the economic issues that now animate voter concerns and Republican advertising. The Inflation Reduction Act (IRA), enacted in August over unified GOP opposition, will lower what seniors pay for medicine and what millions of working families pay for health insurance while cutting the deficit by nearly $300 billion. The IRA also makes sure the nation's biggest, most profitable corporations can no longer get away with paying zero federal income taxes while also restoring funding to improve IRS taxpayer services and to catch more rich and corporate tax cheats.

Undoubtedly because of its long and tortured path to enactment, the IRA is not familiar to most Americans. But a recent poll by Biden pollster Impact Research for ATFAF and its sister organization, Americans for Tax Fairness, that oversampled pure Independents found that once voters are told what's in the new law, 70% of likely voters—including nearly all Democrats, two-thirds of Independents and even a plurality of Republicans—approve of the IRA. Particularly telling is that the tax reforms making the rich and corporations pay a fairer share are about as popular as the prescription drug reforms, especially with swing voters. The poll tested numerous compelling messages Democrats could use to energize voters and to effectively counter GOP critiques.

But instead of Democratic candidates running on these tangible, topical accomplishments that poll extremely well with voters, it is Republican forces—especially super PACs—using a twisted caricature of the IRA to bludgeon their opponents. These spurious attacks claim that the IRA will raise taxes on the middle class, result in a lot of wasteful spending, and unleash 87,000 IRS agents on ordinary taxpayers.

These are lies Democrats could easily rebut by going on offense: noting they took on Big Pharma to lower drug prices while Republicans voted no; they took on Big Oil to reduce energy costs and produce clean energy, while the GOP voted no; and they paid for it all by making billion-dollar corporations and wealthy tax cheats pay their fair share in taxes.

We have seen only one TV ad this cycle making this case against big money special interests and about taxes. It's by Sen. Chris Van Hollen (D-MD), former head of House and Senate Democratic campaign committees. The progressive populism of this ad is similar to that proposed by legendary pollster Stan Greenberg in this video: The Economic Argument That Democrats Aren't Making—But Should!

Joe Biden showed the way in his 2020 primary and general election campaigns. He ran in the primary on an aggressive $4 trillion platform of improved public services paid for with fairer taxes on the wealthy and big corporations. He won the general election with that agenda front and center in his campaign as explained in an analysis by his campaign pollster. Once in office, his Build Back Better plan followed through on his campaign promise. Though the opposition of a couple of conservative Senate Democrats whittled down that plan considerably, the Inflation Reduction Act that eventually emerged makes a down payment on the promise of creating an economy that works for all of us by making the rich and corporations pay their fair share of taxes.

We're not questioning the choice made by individual Democratic candidates and their super PAC supporters to air TV ads on topics that they felt best undermined their opponents or showed the Democrat in the best light. But we are critiquing the failure of Democrats more generally to create ads that draw a contrast with Republicans on which party is doing more to address the economic concerns of working families. It's clear from the polling that Democrats can win that debate—but only if they raise the issue.

DEMOCRATS' HOUSE MAJORITY PAC TV ADS

The House Majority PAC \(HMP\) is a super PAC to elect Democrats to the House of Representatives. It has raised \$134 million this election cycle (end of September). A July Americans for Tax Fairness report found that 25% of HMP contributions were from billionaires. It is focused on protecting Democratic incumbents in “frontline” districts or winning open seats.

As of Oct. 27, this ATFAF analysis has compiled 114 TV ads by HMP attacking Republicans, 34 of them on “economy” issues focused on inflation, government spending, taxes or the IRS. By far, abortion was the most common focus of the ads, followed by roughly equal amounts about candidate character, extremism, crime, drug prices, Social Security and Medicare.

Links to the ads are below. Many of them can be found on the HMP website and a few are on the HMP YouTube page. These ads are not a complete list of all HMP ads.
